Students learn about the world

by Marilyn Phenow

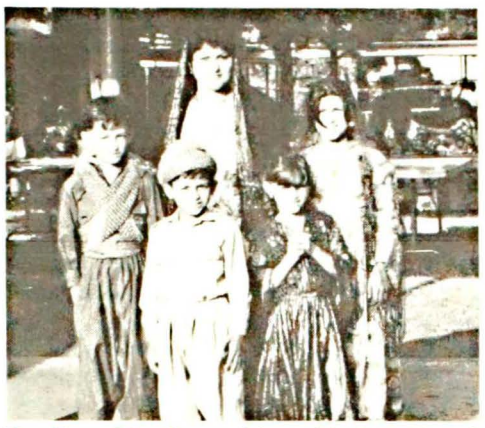
It was a "small world" at San Miguel Elementary last Friday night. Parents, students and administrators dressed in ethnic attire to attend the school's first multicultural fair for two hours.

They celebrated their heritagse from all over the world. Some donned headresses of glitter, sequins, and veils from India, others proudly showed off mideastern gowns and Pakistanian traditional attire while others zeroed in on the foods that each family contributed to the celebration.

"It truly is a celebration for the kids to see who they are as well as what they are in relation to all the other children of different ethnicities," said Sharon Sawyer, PTA member and coordinator of the event. "Our children speak more than 13 different languages in this school, and we wanted them to celebrate the cultural diversity of our school. We wanted the kids to realize they have a lot more in common than they do differences in this small world."

The fair was opened by a school play directed by third-grade instructor Irene Cannon. "The story features a family who wants to travel somewhere and a travel agent is suggesting various places for them to visit." As the places were mentioned, children sang and danced in costumes resembling the culture of the area.

Children and parents strolled along the front courtyard to view the tables featuring various times one might find in a specific country. Some of those countries featured included Pakistan, Afghanistan, Germany, Scotland, Italy, Spain, Mexico, Ireland, Australia, and many more, One exhibit featured dolls from around the world. It was perhaps most visited by the little girls of San Miguel in awe of the beautiful and exotic customs that each doll displayed. The Australian exhibit included pictures displaying dots painted by aboriginal tribes.



The Ahmed family participated in the cultural day at San Miguel Elementary School in their traditional Pakistani clothoses.

Aboriginals used ash and natural dyes on rocks, wood or the ground to draw pictures that resembled well known places in the area. Some pictures outlined a story relating to the environment. Other items featured were boomerangs, books of native folk lore, and the famous animal that Australia is note for, the koala bear.

African-American exhibits featured clay art sculptures of people in different poses with colorful costumes.

For those interested in the Native American culture, southwestern handwoven rugs in vivid colors and authentic leather and beaded moccasins were featured at the table. Handmade dolls of cornstalks were also displayed.

Children not only got a glimpse at another culture, but they had the chance to take some of what

Literacy program granted qualified approval

by Marilyn Phenow

A new literacy program met the approval of the Lemon Grove School District on Monday, even though funding restrictions will limit its implementation.

The board of trustees heard complaints from parents, teachers and administrators about establishing a districtwide program. Many expressed concern that the new program may not be best for each school.

"I think we all agree here that we all want to be on the same page, ensuring that our children will be successful readers early on in the primary grades,' said Constance Fish, superintendent of instruction.

"It's no secret that if they are successful in the early years, it is most likely that their future years will follow in the same vein. It is our job to prepare these kids adequatley for a technological future.

"If they struggle with reading, how can they understand the technological needs for the future. We will be accountable for that."

The need for a literacy plan received broad acceptence, but some teachers and administrators said the California Early Literacy Learning (CELL) program is expensive and schools should be free to develop other plans.

The goal of the district is to ensure that all primary students become fluent readers and writers by the end of second grade and that all students become advanced readers and writers by the end of eighth grade.

After hearing comments, the board voted 5-0 to withhold districtwide implementation of CELL and bring it into San Migual Elementary School as a pilot project.

The board is encouraging each school to hire a literacy coordinator — one element of CELL — and give fuller consideration to implementing CELL.

CELL is a $75,000 program over two years. The district will cover $50,000 of the cost for San Miguel. A federal grant will pay $25,000.

Under district guidelines adopted Monday, students will receive greater literacy training.

As students progress on from primary grades into middle school, so too will their reading comprehension, and clarity in writing. By the eighth grade, the District predicts that all students will work collaboratively in complex problem solving andwill be ready to move on to high school where the students will fine tune these skills to move into a future job. "A job that will demand knowlege of computer and other technological advances," said Fish. "Successful reading is a must for them."

It was last year when the district sent out a survey to teachers of the seven schools in the district, asking for feedback on the improvement of curriculum, instruction with adequate materials, focused in service, appropriate student assessment monitoring, and determination of funding priorities. After reviewing the suggestions, the district began to formulate a district balanced literacy plan. Balanced literacy refers to a program based on teaching all students the techniques used by good readers. Good readers rely on a combination or balance of meaning, knowledge of lan-

Community involvement part of new Sheriff strategy

by Howard Owens

Solving problems instead of just reacting to them could become common practice for the Sheriff's Department, according to Sheriff Bill Kolender.

Kolender announced Saturday at a Board of Supervisor's meeting that his department is moving toward community-oriented policing. The program will put more deputies in the communities of Spring Valley, Lemon Grove, Santee and Lakeside.

"I'm a big proponent of community-oriented policing," Kolender said. "We are attempting to establish a focus of community policing that is countywide, not just for an individual area."

Community-oriented policing isn't just some trendy program law enforcement agencies adopt for a time and then discard, according to experts in the field. It is a total restructuring of an agency. It is a whole new way of thinking about law enforcement. And it takes as much commitment from the community as it does from law enforcers.

"It's politically correct right now to say you're doing community-oriented policing," said Vicky Elder, program manager for community-oriented policing in the Attorney General's office. "But it takes a huge commitment. That's why we stress it's not a program. It's not just putting an officer on a bike or sending one officer into the community. Those are programs. Community-oriented policing is not something you can do for a year and then say it doesn't work. It's an organizational change."

Problem solving

There are two primary components to community-oriented policing.

The first is problem solving. A peace officer must be aware of his or her community and take note of the kind of calls he or she gets and where the calls most often come from. For example, if a deputy finds himself responding several times to the same address, he must spend some time examining why there is always a problem at that address.

Maybe there are other problems going on there that he can't do anything about, but other government agencies can solve. The officer would look for creative solutions, which might include bringing in code compliance officers, the health department, the fire marshal, or whatever other agencies would be appropriate. Together they would fix the problem.

The second element of community-oriented policing is getting the community involved. The deputy spends time with residents and neighbors. They work on solutions together. They share ideas and information.

Traditionally, officers have just reacted to complaints. They've appeared on scene, made their arrests, completed their paperwork and then left.

Reaction will always be a part of law enforcement's job, but in community-oriented policing, law enforcers take more time on individual calls. The goal is to solve problems.

Long-term planning

"It will take five to 10 years for departments to really transition to community policing," Elder said. "You are not going to see immediate reactions. Often times reported crime goes up because people trust the police department more so they report crime more often. Ultimately the goal is to reduce crime, which will happen if the community feels empowered."

Problem-solving police work is an effective tool, according to Elder because 80 percent of the time police are responding to just 10 or 20 percent of the addresses in a community.

The primary force moving community-oriented policing into all of San Diego County is the availability of federal grants to start community-policing programs. The grants are part of the crime bill signed into law last year.

The Sheriff's Department expects to add 21 officers to its force. Spring Valley will receive seven additional deputies and Lakeside will see five new deputies on the street by the end of the year.

Both Lemon Grove and Santee are under contract with Sheriff's Department for law enforcement protection. Each of those cities has also applied for grants. Lemon Grove expects to add two deputies to its force and Santee one.

"We're really looking forward to it," said Capt. Charles Lane of the Santee Sheriff's Substation. "It's an extra added dimension. But the community really has to get involved. We can't be everywhere. The way it's structured, it doesn't work if the community gauge, and familiarity with sounds and symbols. These are skills taught to all beginning readers. Reading is taught within an overall context of written and spoken language used in everyday occurrence.

Literacy

Phonics is also a major component of this reading model. As with the written word, teachers model grade level writing, and students write on their own. However, the most important concept to this balanced literacy approach is staff development. Educators instruct through seminar and conferences classroom teachers on various learning and teaching techniques for the classroom.

Currently, each school supplements a district adopted Language Arts curriculum including textbooks, with reading programs that target the student who remains behind his classmates in reading level. Monterey Heights Elementary uses the program, Project Read. This program targets those struggling students. A consultant works with first through fifth-grader teachers who then in turn teach these struggling students with visual learning devices. Other schools such as Vista La Mesa, San Miguel, and San Altos have been using the program, Reading Recovery. A program that targets first-graders who are not reading up to grade level. A teacher on site is given special training to assist these children on a one-to-one basis for a 30 minute session. It is believed by educators that the sooner you get to the problem, the better. A reading recovery teacher costs $15,000.

The district contends these programs have been working, but they want to take one more step. "We want to ensure that none of these children will fall through the cracks," said Fish. "So we're introducing a literacy program that includes a staff development program that will teach all teachers how to teach reading more effectively. We aren't saying they aren't doing a good job, what we are saying is this will empower them even more to target all the students to be better readers."

CELL, developed by California State University, San Bernadino education professors, is to provide access to good first teaching for all children. It was developed in response to requests from school districts for a classroom instructional model that will compliment and supplement the highly rated Reading Recovery. Under the model, an instructional team at each school will include the principal, classroom teachers K-8, special education and reading recovery teachers. In addition, one staff member is to be trained as a literacy coordinator.

The coordinator will provide support and be a mentor to the rest of the team. CELL teaching strategies will include reading aloud to children, guided reading, independent reading and interactive and independent writing.

"These techniques will be used with a wide variety of research based teaching methodologies that have been proven to work," said Becky Shook, CELL spokesperson. "But what's key to this program, is the observation survey and ongoing assessment that will focus in on each child's progress. I will go from classroom to classroom monitoring which strategies are working best for each student, class, and teacher. What may work for one may not work for the other. We'll be able to decipher this and zero in on the problem."

But Fish said it is the teacher as well as the student that will gain from this program. "In the survey, teachers mentioned there was no support for them," said Fish. "They don't have the time to talk to other teachers and share what teaching methods work best for them, or what seems not to be working. This program will establish that missing cohesiveness between all the different grade-level teachers working on the same track to meet the same goal.

Pastor and parishioner making speedy recovery after kidney switch

by Lora Clark

"Some people thought I was volunteering for a long period of pain and suffering, but the month following the operation was more like a vacation than a convalescence!"

So said Rev. Ed Pettis, co-pastor of Lemon Grove Congregational United Church of Christ, who recently had the opportunity to help - in a most unique way - someone who helped him 16 years ago.

In 1979 the members of the church found themselves in need of a pastor. A search committee was formed, with Martha Vickers as chairwoman. Vickers was especially impressed with Ed and his wife Joan, who had applied for the position. She and the members of the committee recommended that the Pettises be hired as co-pastors. A congregational vote was taken, and they were hired. During the years that followed, Martha, Ed and Joan became very good friends.

During that time, a kidney disease, one that is often passed on to female members of the family, took the life of Vickers' mother. Last year Vickers herself began to experience kidney failure and was told that she would soon be in dialysis. Pettis learned that his blood type matched hers and offered himself as a potential donor. At the end of the long, tedious journey through innumerable tests and various medical procedures, a successful kidney transplant was performed. Both donor and recipient are doing remarkably well. Their recovery has been nothing short of miraculous.

During his pre-operation process, Pettis was told that his hospital stay would be five days, but he was released just three days after the surgery. Seven days later he walked a half-mile, and ten weeks after that he was doing 50 pushups per day.

Pettis attributes his speedy recovery to the fact that the surgeon did not have to remove a piece of his rib, which must sometimes be done to insure against bruising the kidney as it is being removed.

"Either my kidney was low enough or my rib was high enough," said Pettis. "Even when it's done surgically, having a part of the rib chiseled off is like having a broken rib. I didn't have to deal with that."

The day after the transplant procedure, thanks to its siderails and his post-operative truss, Pettis was able to get himself up and out of his hospital bed. He shuffled around the nurse's station a few times, taking longer strolls each time he was up.

"Seeing how well Martha was doing gave me a lift," said Pettis, who explained that he could see a slight difference every time she walked past the door of his room. "She might be walking slightly faster than the last time, or I'd see her smiling a little bit."

To be sure that his kidney was fully functioning prior to its removal liters of fluid were pumped into Pettis prior to the surgery. And, in order to keep his system fully functioning after the operation, even more liters of fluid were added.

"I gained five pounds the day of the operation and three pounds the next day," said Pettis, "but once my plumbing was back in business, I started to get rid of the liquid buildup. Within a couple of days my weight, temperature, and blood pressure were down, so they kicked me out and told me to go home!"

Pettis, accompanied by one of his two sons, started taking short walks around his neighborhood. "I couldn't win any races," he said with a grin, "but I could WALK!" Within a month after the surgery, he was walking two miles in 35 minutes.

He started doing push-ups 15 years ago because he wanted to do some type of exercise but was basically lazy. "I figured a push-up was the one exercise that used lots of muscles all at one time," said Pettis. He was doing 50 push-ups each day prior to surgery. Nine weeks after the operation he started doing ten a day, then 25 for a couple of days, and on up to 50.

While Pettis' life has returned to what it was prior to the transplant procedure, Vickers' life has changed dramatically - all for the better.

Prior to the transplant, Vickers was experiencing chronic fatigue due to the toxins that had built up in her system. "I had gotten used to feeling bad," stated Vickers. "I thought it was normal. Now I know that feeling tired all the time isn't normal at all. It's wonderful to feel well and to have plenty of energy!"

For three months following the procedure Vickers was an outpatient of Sharp's transplant center clinic, where her medication was monitored and adjusted three times a week. On March 22 she was released from the clinic and was referred back to her primary care physician, whom she'll see once every two weeks and less often as time progresses.

Contrast that time commitment to what she would be doing now had she not received a healthy kidney. According to Kathy Laws, RN administrator of the Chronic Unit at the Renal Treatment Center in El Cajon, most patients must be treated three times a week. "The average length of treatment is three to four hours," explained Laws. "The process itself is not painful. The most difficulty our patients have is sitting in a chair for four hours."

Pettis encourages people to consider being an organ donor and wants to allay the fears involved.

"Medical science has learned to minimize the pain of surgery and to maximize the recovery rate," stated Pettis. "Part of that is in getting people up and moving. We know now that the human body functions more efficiently when it's upright and moving than when it's in a prone, inactive state."

Pettis has had the opportunity to compare the recovery period after surgery of the 90s with how it was almost 40 years ago when he walked around a bus that was parked at a curb and into the path of a car that was going 20 m.p.h.. He sees a difference in the way those in the medical field deal with pain.

"When I woke up from the anesthetic, pain medication was already being pumped into my body," said Pettis, "and when I was released I was told to start taking medication before the pain became acute."

doesn't get involved."

La Mesa began its community-oriented policing program nearly two years ago. Chief Walt Mitchell said the program is going well so far, even though he considers the program still in its infancy stage.

"It was a big cultural change (for our officers), but not as big of a cultural changes as we think it is," Mitchell said. "If you look at how this country was settled, we started with community-oriented policing. Settlers in the Old West, whenever they faced a problem they circled the wagons and everybody pitched in. That's basically what we're doing now. We're circling the wagons and asking people to pitch in."

La Mesa is looking to add two more officers to the force through the federal grant. The grant for the cities and county will expire in three years. After that, local agencies must pick up the tab.

Both Capt. Lane and Capt. Bill Flores, who runs the Lemon Grove substation, say they are already doing some community-oriented policing activities.

In Lemon Grove and Spring Valley, for example, Flores said he has a deputy tasked with acting as a liaison with a local high school. That deputy regularly visits the school. He talks with students, parents, teachers and administrators. He helps them solve their problems.

Because of his presence there, Flores said, the Sheriff's Department has been warned about gang conflicts. Potential fights have been avoided because of department intervention.

"Community-oriented policing is a philosophy that the entire organization must adopt," Flores said. "There will always be some people who resist change, but I think most cops are results oriented. If the results are such that they aren't going to some neighborhood problem time and time again, I think they will see this is the way to go."

Commentary

While I was away

by Paul Treske

I've been away for a four-day weekend up north in the Paso Robles Wine Country. After the bustle of work, responsibility, city driving and the lot, the beauty and serenity of the rolling hills filled with row upon row of grape vines did much to soothe the restless beast that lies within. But I'm back home now, and while I was away ...

The image of "NYPD Blue" was given a severe battering by the noxious behavior of a delegation of New York Police attending a memorial convocation in Washington D.C. Drunk and disorderly would only begin to describe the way they trashed everything around them during an orgy of drinking and destruction.

Reading of this debacle and of Tailhook and other similar outbursts, one wonders what devils possess those who, while working, must present an outward image of strength, courage and stoicism? One can only imagine that either the pressure and danger of the job is so severe that they must explode when on release, or that they are grossly undeveloped in their social skills. On the other hand, it was apparently only the New York Police who exploded - we do not hear of any other. If that is the case - who in the world does New York have for its police force?

While I was away ... CBS canned Connie Chung from co-anchoring the evening news with Dan Rather. This has set off a spate of controversy with various women's groups claiming sex discrimination and others, whose bent is conspiracy, seeing the dark and manipulative hand of Rather in the dismissal.

I frankly don't see either. I've never been much taken with Chung and see her as a lightweight in a heavyweight's job. Why she was teamed with Rather is up for conjecture. Perhaps CBS executives, panicking over the CBS evening news drop in the ratings, saw the popular and attractive Chung as the antidote. If so, they only created more problems for their network. Once teamed, each time one or the other was given a plum assignment (i.e. Chung to Oklahoma City instead of Rather) the gossip pundits worked overtime suggesting that one or the other might be on the skids. Now, breaking up the pairing, the execs have opened themselves up to a much nastier kind of gossip.

Chung will, I'm sure, land on her feet. Several other networks, including Fox, would enjoy having her - if for no other reason than embarrassing CBS.

While I was away ... The National Rifle Association fully stripped away its mask of being just a bunch of good old boys and gals who enjoy hunting and target shooting and revealed itself as an arrogant, power-hungry bunch who are out to make changes that go far beyond gun legislation. They are now fully out in the open and, after briefly apologizing for the militant tone of Wayne LaPierre's fundraising letter, appear now to be saying "to hell with it - we are out to make major changes in how the government works and we don't care who knows."

They are scary and appear way too cozy with the renegade militia groups. A militant pairing of those two groups could constitute a substantial threat to the nation, and it is ironic that they are allowed the freedom to shreik out their anger at the government by the very laws of that government they so challenge. I suspect that this is only the beginning!

Letters to the Editor

We must be choosy

The San Diego Urban League editorial (May 18) read as an honest tribute to a man who probably is well qualified to be U.S. Surgeon General. Dr. Henry W. Foster, Jr. has a fine record in many areas of medicine which relate to the problems of our youth, however, he should not be confirmed.

If you read malice into the foregoing, please do not think that is directed at Dr. Foster. It is not. I do direct a strong degree of malice at our "leaders" in the White House. They could have nominated a person who has a personal record which would stand an intense scrutiny before their name is proffered.

All too often this has been the case. For example, the recent confirmation of a man to the U.S. Supreme Court who should never have been even nominated.

The information about Dr. Foster has not included the fact that he played football while in college. Lacking such experience, he should never have been selected to carry the "political football" of abortion. Abortion should never have been relegated to the field of partisan politics. It is too serious a matter to be just tossed about.

I say let Dr. Foster continue to do his good deeds in the medical community of Tennessee and the administration should more carefully survey the field of medical practitioners to select another nominee.

We the people must be more vigilant in our selection of politicians at all levels of government and their choices of aids and cabinet members.

The beat goes on

I was very impressed with the article written by Howard Owens in the May 4 edition regarding the Volunteer Patrol Program ("On the Beat").

As a member of that program working out of the Santee Sheriff office, I can state that Mr. Owens' information was extremely accurate. It was obvious that he had put considerable time into gathering details about the success of the program and reported them in depth.

The Sheriff Department is currently expanding this program into Lakeside and the unincorporated areas of El Cajon and needs more volunteers, age 55 and older.

Applications may be picked up at the Lakeside Chamber of Commerce or call 561-1031.

RICHARD T. RAFTER
Lakeside

I commend Howard Owens on the most excellent article "On the Beat" (May 4) covering the activities of the Retired Seniors Volunteer Patrols (RSVP).

As a member of the Lemon Grove Volunteer Patrol Program working in Spring Valley and Mount Helix areas, I consider the scope of our responsibilities were accurately defined, and we certainly appreciated the kind accolades.

There was one thing that I found missing and that was giving the regulars and reserves their just due. Yes, the RSVP picks up part of the safe load, but when push comes to shove, it is the Regulars and Reserves that put themselves in the front line. And forget not - the Reserves are volunteers as well. Please don't forget who is carrying the real load. You don't diminish the RSVPs by saying so. We know it.

Even bicycles are running stop signs

I am concerned for the many Lemon Grove bicyclists (of all ages) who pay absolutely no attention to the boulevard stop signs which "control" our traffic. This continuing disregard for common-sense rules is leading inexorably to a major tragedy in Lemon Grove.

Could one of your writers discuss the problem with the local Sheriff's office, make a few checks at key corners and gin up an article to alert Lemon Grove citizens to the dangers involved?

Perhaps we can prevent the tragedy by discussing it before it happens.

Probation should keep camps

The proposed plan to transfer Adult Institutions from the Probation Department to the Sheriff includes the closing of Camp West Fork and increasing the capacity and security of Camp Barrett, thereby making it into another rural medium security facility.

I object because:

- It is too costly. Minimum security camps are more economical than medium security institutions. The modifications to Camp Barrett and increased operating costs will be expensive at a time when the taxpayers are building the new downtown jail.
- Closing West Fork eliminates 240 custody beds from a system under court order to reduce overcrowding.
- This would eliminate all minimum security custody in the county. Increased use of Electronic Surveillance and Work Release will not negate the need for minimum security custody.
- The Sheriff is responsible for law enforcement and detention. Probation is responsible for supervising convicted criminals in the community. If the camps were to remain as minimum security institutions, they would be most effectively operated by Probation.

Say It Isn't So, EDCO

by Pete Smith

Am I the only one who hates (my Mom always told me hate is an ugly word, but I'm sticking with it) the new-fangled trash cans that grace our streets? I don't feel old enough to be set in my ways and cringe at change, but this new idea frazzles me. Who's responsible? Did we vote on it? Did anyone bother to ask?

For the past 44 years (all my life) I've lived in Lemon Grove. I remember when Thomas Brothers used to pick up the trash twice a week. Not long ago I remember all the furor over how much EDCO would pick up. It was city council business. Will they only take ten bags or cans, or more than ten? They said they'd pick up all that was put on the curb. Sure there were rules, no car batteries, limbs had to be bundled and a set length, cement blocks were straight out. We understood.

Recycling, now I can get behind that. EDCO makes a little off our aluminum cans and newsprint so that would keep the cost of our trash pick-up down. Oh, the new trucks are not as efficient as expected, and they cost so much money. Our bills won't go down after all? Well I can still get a warm fuzzy feeling by doing a good deed. I'll pre-cycle. Purchase items that need little recycling, or are made of material that recycles easily. No more Timex Watches where the packaging is more elaborate than the timepiece. I should have known something was amiss when a friend told me her story. She's so adept at recycling that she had only a handful of trash a month. She called EDCO and asked to have her service stopped. She could toss her little bit in with the neighbor's or even mail it to the dump there was so little. Could she please do her part and continue to put out the blue recycling bin? After all there are the few things she couldn't fashion into Barbie clothes and the reject liter bottle that wouldn't conform to being a hummingbird feeder. "NO!" They told her that if they can't have her trash they didn't want her recycling ...

Now correct me if I'm wrong: isn't trash pick-up a service we elect to have? What if Cox Cable said we're giving you too many channels, we are going to cut you down to ten. Wouldn't you expect a sizable reduction in fees? Wouldn't Cox expect a sizable reduction in customers? If San Diego Gas & Electric lowered their service there would be public outcry. When Helix Water tells us there is a drought, please conserve, we do and see a reduction in charges because we did. Now EDCO is TELLING us we can only put out ONE can per week, but our bill will go down "slightly." I just looked at the latest bill. A big $1.05 reduction. That's a whopping 35¢ a month. Thank you EDCO, my house will be paid for in no time with savings like that.

I'm told the cans hold more. Prove it! I was weeding over at my mother's. Had to haul her old regular can to her back yard because I couldn't maneuver the new one back there (another gripe). I filled the old can two-thirds full, did not tamp it down. Two such loads overfilled the new wonder can. The lid barely stays open so I wrenched it past center and made it stay open. Then I climbed up and tried to compress the meager load. Those wheels don't help. I looked like I was learning the hula with an ivy skirt. Traffic stopped to scratch their head. As I realized how dangerous such a stunt was, I began thinking about who would be responsible if I had neutered myself trying to put a normal weeks worth of clean green in EDCO's can? They put me in jeopardy. Everything we put out has to go into those cans. What about the large box a new television comes in? It would fill the can. We are told to hang onto our old cans. To stockpile trash, put the overage into the new can on the weeks we don't have much to put out. I don't know about you, but I average about 1 1/2 cans a week. Doesn't take a genius to see I'll never be caught up. What about Christmas? If you have children you could be living with the trash as long as the kids. All that wrapping paper and stuffing.

Oh, and this business about having them on the street for pick-up. I have a red curb in front of my house on Massachusetts Avenue. Can't even park my car in front of my house. Have been warned by a Sheriff's Deputy not to even wait on my bicycle in front of my abode. Who is liable when some idiot hits the light right at Mt. Vernon and doesn't see our new gray and green chess pieces sitting in his path at 70 miles an hour? Having one catapulted into my neighbor's house wouldn't be a pretty sight. Of course I may as well leave them on the street year around for I can't get them between my cars. Is EDCO going to enroll everyone in a weight lifting program in order to put them away? My mom can't move them empty, so now I have to make two trips on trash day to put hers out and away.

I'll bet that we soon hear that the new trucks cost more than expected and we shouldn't expect that slight reduction (35¢ a month) to last. Sure EDCO will be paying less to dump because they are accepting less and have fewer employees doing the work. I won't hold my breath.

So, am I the only one who hates the new trash cans and EDCO's reduction in service? Now, about Wells Fargo moving into Lucky's.

What's that all about?

The Whole Truth on Old Time Days

Can you remember what we called "Old Time Days" in 1955? In our flurry to get the May 11 Old Time Days Edition on the street for the parade, we failed to answer the question.

The answer is: the "Pool Carnival and Parade." According to archivist Pete Smith, it was much like today's event, but the outcome of money and support was to build a community swimming pool.

By the way, the Lemon Grove community pool was never built.

Things To Do!

Helix 'Waterun' set for Monday

Television news anchor Carol LeBeau will be one of the runners at the Helix Water District's second annual run/walk, Waterun '95, beginning at 7:30 a.m. Monday, Memorial Day.

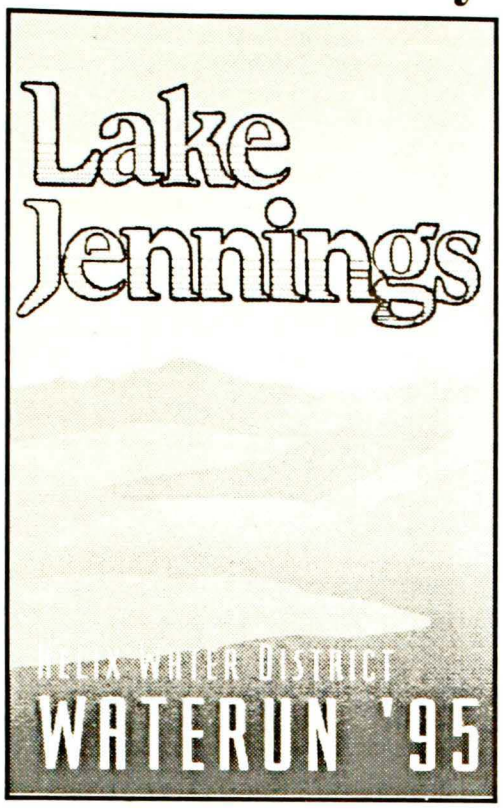
The course wraps around Lake Jennings, Helix's primary emergency storage facility. The 8K run/walk boasts a challenging paved and unpaved course with rolling hills and a spectacular view of Lake Jennings.

Participants should take I-8 to Lake Jennings Road and follow the signs to the staging area. The entry fee is $18 for adults and $11 for children 12 and under. Last year over 300 runners turned out for the run. This year, the district is hoping for about 600 runners and walkers.

May is Water Awareness Month and the district wants to celebrate by encouraging people to remember the importance of emergency water storage. Ninety percent of San Diego's water supply comes from the Colorado River and Northern California.

Corporate sponsors of the event are Movin Shoes, Kashi, Olive Garden Restaurant and Power Bar. Proceeds will go to support local schools through mini-grants to create student-planned xeriscape gardens, computer time on the National Geographic Network and water educational materials. Schools have been offered free registration for running together as a team.

Applications for the run/walk may still be picked up at all East County libraries, chambers of commerce within the district and at the Helix Water District office at 8111 University Ave. in La Mesa.



For further information on participating in Waterun '95 or how to volunteer the day of the event, call Shirley Massie at 466-0585 ext. 270.

Observatory opens for summer stargazing

The San Diego State University astronomy department will open its Mount Laguna Observatory to the public on Friday and Saturday nights at sunset, beginning tomorrow and continuing to Sept. 2.

Visitors are welcome to view celestial objects through the 21-inch Buller telescope and see a slide show in the auditorium. Staff members will be on hand to answer questions.

Visitors should obtain observatory tickets from the U.S. Forest Service visitors' information office on Sunrise Highway in Mount Laguna. Tickets are free and distributed on a first-come basis for viewing the same evening. The visitors' office is open from approximately 1 - 5 p.m. Fridays and 9 a.m. - 5 p.m. Saturdays.

To reach the observatory from East County, drive east on Interstate 8 to the Sunrise Highway off-ramp (Highway S1); drive northeast on Sunrise Highway about nine miles to Morris Ranch Road. Turn east onto Morris Ranch Road for about one-quarter of a mile to the observatory's visitor parking lot.

The astronomy department recommends that guests bring a flashlight and a sweater or jacket. The observatory is closed to the public a few evenings each summer because of special functions. To check the schedule or obtain further information, call 594-1413.

Bash expected to draw 20,000 Charger fans

Some 20,000 Charger fans are expected to convene at Jack Murphy Stadium for the Super Bolt Bash, 3 to 9 p.m. Saturday. Organizers are hoping it will be the largest sports celebration of its kind in San Diego.

On the docket is the 1994 Highlight Film, as well as locker room, training room and skybox tours, an autograph tent, Chargers Kids Zone and entertainment. The film will be followed by a fireworks display.

Tickets are $5 for adults and $2.50 for children 12 and under. Children under three are free and parking will be reduced to $2 per car. A percentage of all ticket sales will benefit the Junior Seau Foundation, Carney's KickStart For Kids and Athletes for Education.

East County is a great place to play!

The Kumon Method is unique, individualized approach to internalizing math skills. Based on the results of a diagnostic test, the student progresses through a systematic, linear curriculum. Because the Method is completely individualized, each student progresses at his or her own pace and advances to the next level only after comfortably mastering the current material. For this reason, the Kumon Method works equally well for the remedial as well as the gifted student.

As a parent of Kumon student, you can plan on taking your child to two sessions per week at the La Mesa Math Center. The Kumon Center is open two afternoons per week, so you are free to come at the time most convenient for you. At each session, your child will practice math skills under the supervision of the Kumon Instructor. Your child will also receive daily assignments to be completed at home and turned in at the next session.

they learned home with them. An arts and crafts area was set up for the kids. Children created God's eyes (a craft) with bright colored strings of yarn, and threaded beads onto fishing wire to fashion beaded necklaces and bracelets. Oragami paper also was used to create unique crafts.

Once the families had their curiosity satisifed, they turned to satisfying their appetities at the huge potluck tables that featured such famous ethnic delectables as sauerkraut and sausage, baklova, enchiladas and chile relleno, middle eastern rice and meat dishes, and many others. As the families settled down to eat, entertainment was provided by a jazz ensemble and Brazilian percussion group from Cuyamaca College. The crowd nodded their heads to and fro to the sounds that came from the bongo drummers, and later clapped frantically as Mexican dancers performed with candles.
